

Moving Forward

Have Liberals and Leftists Lost Their Minds?

I've always considered myself basically a radical populist and a political independent.

I usually agree with many on the left when it comes to issues such as war and peace, imperialism, disarmament, civil rights, women's rights, gay rights, economic justice, labor organizing, environmental protection, and climate issues. But I also always felt a kinship with what I call "grassroots libertarians," those distrustful of Establishment politicians (whether Democrat or Republican), proponents of natural food, natural health, common sense, Constitutional rights--those believing that we need a radical decentralization of power from national and international elites and corporate board rooms to local participatory democracy.

Listen Big Ag: Small Farmers Feed the World

Colin Todhunter writes: "In the report 'Who Will Feed Us? The Industrial Food Chain vs the Peasant Food Web (ETC Group, 2017), it was shown that a diverse network of small-scale producers (the peasant food web) actually feeds 70% of the world, including the most hungry and marginalized.

"The flagship report indicated that only 24% of the food produced by the industrial food chain actually reaches people. Furthermore, it was shown that industrial food costs us more: for every dollar spent on industrial food, it costs another two dollars to clean up the mess.

Immune Support with Evergreen Tea

Unlike synthetic pharmaceuticals, which often have a narrowly targeted mode of action, herbal medicines work in multifaceted and complex ways on the body.

Evergreen tea provides a plentiful dose of vitamin C, which is proven to have a beneficial effect in preventing and relieving symptoms of virus-induced respiratory infection, in addition to promoting general immunity to illness.

As COVID Crumbles, Prepping for the Next Pandemic

Kit Knightly writes in the Off-Guardian: "It seems every week some new "expert" who spent the last two years predicting we're all gonna die turns up on the news claiming we should "treat Covid like the flu".

"But just because they're giving slack on Covid does not mean the agenda behind Covid is gone. Far from it."

Monsanto's Poisons in Breakfast Cereals Threaten Children

Mercola.com reports: the USDA doesn't even test for glyphosate in some of the foods most known for glyphosate contamination, such as oats and chickpeas. But EWG's testing in 2018 revealed 43 out of 45 food products made with conventionally grown oats tested positive for glyphosate, 31 of which had glyphosate levels higher than EWG scientists believe would be protective of children's health.

Judgement Day for Monsanto and Bayer?

The Defender writes: "Truth will out. Eventually, given enough time, the good, the bad and the ugly will be revealed.

"Such is the case with Monsanto's dubious herbicide glyphosate. The long-winding story on how Monsanto and its governmental enablers at the Environmental Protection Agency first registered the weedkiller Roundup under at best dubious circumstances is sickening.

"In March 2015 U.S District Judge for the Northern District of California allowed public release of internal Monsanto documents showing how Monsanto influenced EPA to reclassify glyphosate from a Class C carcinogen to a Class E category which paved the way for glyphosate Roundup production. It was nothing short of a cover-up that put greed ahead of public safety."

Time to Transition to Organic and Regenerative Farming

Allison Johnson writes: "We know farming organically and regeneratively—that is, with careful attention to soil health and ecosystems above and below ground, and without reliance on fossil fuel-based pesticides and fertilizers—is a key piece in the climate puzzle, as well as a recipe for long-term resilience in our food supply.

"...the U.S. hasn't made the long-term health of our food and farming system—and the people and resources who make it work—a priority. But it's not too late."

Big Pharma and Indentured Politicians Pushing States to Ban Nutritional Supplements

The Alliance for Natural Health warns: "Will the supplements you need be placed behind store counters, or locked away in a case?"

"A number of states are considering bills that would restrict access to certain supplements... We need to send a strong message across the country that these bills are an ill-advised, unnecessary attack on our freedom."
