“Nature is Not for Sale” Vandana Shiva Tells RFK Jr.

Children’s Health Defense reports:

“Agroecology — sustainable farming that works with nature, rather than depleting nature — is the answer urgently needed to address global hunger, poverty and climate change, according to Vandana Shiva, Ph.D., environmental activist, author and founder of Navdanya International.

Shiva told Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., on a recent episode of ‘RFK Jr. The Defender Podcast’: ‘Asset management companies go to an indebted company and say, ‘Give us your forest and your mountains, and here’s the money to pay your debt.’

‘Because we are in a debt crisis, this kind of new enslavement will increase unless we rise up and say, ‘Nature’s not for sale.’

America’s Recipe for Systemic Disintegration

Longtime OCA allies Richard Gale and Dr. Gary Null tell it like it is: “More than ever before in American history people are no longer able to trust their leaders in government, industry and the media...Throughout the US, people are waking up to a once in a lifetime experience that our body-politics are built upon a fragile foundation held together with scotch tape and paper clips. Others are waking up to the reality that they may be evicted from their homes and apartments tomorrow. About 75 percent of restaurants and bars closed during the pandemic will never reopen again. Yet the sole message fed to us daily by the mainstream media is that the only important issue on hand is to remain fearful of a virus, get tested, and keep up with your Covid-19 vaccine boosters.

Food Shortages & Economic Collapse Sustain “Business as Usual”

Colin Todhunter writes:

“In March 2022, UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres warned of a ‘hurricane of hunger and a meltdown of the global food system’ in the wake of the crisis in Ukraine.

According to the International Panel of Experts on Sustainable Food Systems, there is currently sufficient food and no risk of global food supply shortages.

We see an abundance of food but skyrocketing prices. The issue is not food shortage but speculation on food commodities and the manipulation of an inherently flawed global food system that serves the interests of corporate agribusiness traders and suppliers of inputs at the expense of people’s needs and genuine food security.

Regenerating the Human Story

Award winning journalist and founding editor of the Esperanza Project, Tracy L. Barnett writes:

“Over the past decade, Via Orgánica has developed a model that has enabled them to have a substantial impact in the region. Through establishing a restaurant, a store and a weekly street market, and sponsoring a series of classes and workshops, they’ve been able to hire 60 full-time staff and provide a decent living for more than 200 growers who are part of their network. Rosana Álvarez, who manages the contacts with the producers, has seen many changes over the years in their farming and in their lives. Some have stopped using agrochemicals; others, who were about to use them, have made the decision to resist the offers of the conventional government “package,” which involves the use of agrochemicals. Some have learned to make compost and protect the earth with mulch. Most of them have taken classes and workshops, which are free for farmers.”

The Global Populist Uprising

Real Clear Politics reports:

“Russell Brand spoke with journalist Kim Iversen about how some global agencies (the WEF or World Economic Forum) seem to have an influence on the way that nations devise policy, for example... the changes around fertilizer that would bankrupt farmers. ‘There is a populist uprising against globalism happening all over the world. Why are the mainstream media not reporting on it? Could it be that they are the propaganda arm of the centrist state?’
